Got it Ghanaian palbearers Dancing PalbearersScreenshot from the video clip showing porters dancing with the coffin, which is originally from BBC News.Background informationOriginPrampam, GhanaMembers Benjamin Aidoo Dancing Palbearers, also known by a variety of names including Dancing Coffin, Coffin Dancers, and the Coffin Dance Meme are a Ghanaian group of porters who are based in the coastal town of Prampam in the Greater Accra region of southern Ghana , although they occur across the country as well as internationally. [1] They are locally called Nana Otafria Pallbearing and Waiting Service or Dada awu. The group first caught the world's attention with a BBC report in 2017. In March 2020, the videos were paired with Tony Igy's EDM song Astronomia and gained popularity in fail edits. [4] The images also became part of an Internet meme in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic in early 2020. Origin The Dancing Palbearers are led by Benjamin Aidoo, who started the band as a regular pallbearer service. Later, he came up with the idea of adding choreography to their work as porters. There is an additional charge for dancing with the coffin at a funeral. The Dancing Palbearers first came to fame in 2017 when they were featured in a BBC News report. The third video, which showed porters accidentally falling from a coffin during their dance, was first posted by Facebook user Bigscout Nana Prempeth on May 2 and garnered more than 2,900 reactions, 4,600 shares and 350,000 views in one year, and uploaded to YouTube where it received more than 725,000 views. [8] Propagation The video has gained significant popularity on TikTok as a punchline for THE FAIL clips in a similar way to To Be Continued and We'll Be Right Back memes, implying that the person in the FAIL video is dead. For example, on March 6, 2020, 2020, Trickshots account posted a version of the meme that received over 2.9 million views and 237,000 likes. [9] In 2020, the meme was used to send a message worldwide during the ongoing coronavirus pandemic. [10] Since the trend, it has been popular on social media, but mostly used on TikTok. [11] In popular culture in Nigeria, displaying different dance skills with the coffin on their way instead of burial. At the end of March 2020, a YouTuber named Syon uploaded the video to YouTube, sparking a trend on the Internet. In April, the band was the subject of a darkly comical internet meme when videos of people suffering from various misadventures, followed by clips of porters dancing with coffins (implicitly the victims of previous clips), were widely uploaded to Reddit, YouTube and TikTok. The clips are usually paired with the song Astronomia by Russian musical artist Tony Igy and remixed by Dutch duo Vicetone, although others use either You Know I'll Go Get by DJ Haning and Rizky Ayuba (a remixed version of Enrique Iglesias' song Finally You) or Lenka's Trouble Is a Friend. [13] Many uses of this meme are generally associated with the COVID-19 pandemic, which was underway when the meme became popular. In Brazil, the social media meme was brought to the streets, as a billboard image featuring the coffin dancers was displayed with the caption stay home or dance with us. [15] In May, the group released a video in which they capitalized on the phrase, encouraging viewers to stay home or dance with us. The leaders of the libertarian party in Georgia Girchi dressed in traditional Georgian clothing - Chokha - and made their own version of the video. In May 2020, US President Donald Trump shared an edited video of dancing porters carrying a coffin on his social media in response to a controversial remark by Joe Biden. In the edited video, Biden's campaign logo was superimposed on the coffin. Biden, who was vice president under Barack Obama, later defeated Trump to become president in the 2020 election. In Colombia and Peru, police officers imitate the group dancing carrying a coffin on their shoulders, encouraging the community to stay home to stem the spread of coronavirus. [19] [20] In Hong Kong, a company began to cash in by modeling them in plastic figurines for sale. [21] They have become a symbol warning people to stay home during the pandemic while their videos are edited in memes to prevent people from exhibiting behaviors at COVID-19 and urging them to stay indoors. Their videos have also been shared across the board and generated strong interest in countries such as Brazil, the United States and China. Dance porters were mentioned 60,000 times on Twitter in April. In early October 2020, the meme underwent a revival on social media following the White House outbreak of Covid-19, in which President Trump himself was diagnosed with illness. [22] The use of the meme after British Prime Minister Boris Johnson tested positive for COVID-19.
